Sales Executive Role Description — Customer Responsibilities

1. Responsibilities

Walk-in customer engagement

The Sales Executive serves as an initial point of contact for walk-in customers. Engagement should be focused on understanding customer requirements, presenting relevant vehicle information and moving the customer through the appropriate sales steps.

Customer communication is a required competency for the role. The Sales Executive should therefore communicate vehicle information clearly and respond to customer questions using accurate product knowledge.

Product demonstration

Product demonstrations allow customers to understand the vehicle being considered. The Sales Executive is responsible for presenting the product and connecting its relevant features to the customer's needs.

Test drive coordination

The Sales Executive coordinates test drives as part of the customer journey. Coordination includes ensuring that the test-drive activity is arranged through the applicable branch process before the customer proceeds.

Negotiation

Negotiation must remain within approved discount slabs. The Sales Executive may negotiate with customers within the limits approved by the company and should not represent an unapproved discount as available.

Booking documentation

Once a customer proceeds with a booking, the Sales Executive handles the required booking documentation. The documentation step provides the formal record of the customer's decision and the transaction details required for the next stages.

Financing coordination

For customers using financing, the Sales Executive coordinates with the relevant financing process. The role supports the customer in moving the financing-related stage forward while maintaining accurate sales information.

Sales Executive Role Description — Booking and Delivery

1. Responsibilities

Booking documentation

Booking documentation should be handled carefully because it connects the customer's purchase decision with the downstream transaction process. The Sales Executive is responsible for completing the booking documentation required for the role.

The employee should ensure that information supplied during the booking stage is consistent with the transaction being processed and should raise questions through the appropriate sales channel when clarification is required.

Financing coordination

Financing coordination is part of the Sales Executive's responsibility for financed customers. The role connects the customer with the applicable financing process and supports the information flow needed for the transaction.

Financed sales also connect to the role's KPI for outstanding-installment collection. The Sales Executive should maintain awareness of financed customer follow-up responsibilities associated with this measure.

Delivery handover

The Sales Executive is responsible for delivery handover after the relevant sales stages have been completed. The handover represents the final customer-facing stage identified in this role description.

The delivery interaction should be handled professionally and should provide a clear transition from completed sales documentation to customer receipt of the vehicle.

Customer journey

The role can be understood as a connected sequence: walk-in engagement, product demonstration, test-drive coordination, negotiation within approved discount slabs, booking documentation, financing coordination where applicable, and delivery handover.

Role continuity

The Sales Executive should maintain continuity across these stages rather than treating each activity as an isolated task. Information collected during customer engagement should support the later booking, financing and delivery stages.
